COMMENT

In the last month of the year developed market equities continued to rally, providing investors with the third calendar year in a row of strong positive returns. Strong earnings growth drove equities higher. The leading world indices finished the month strongly – Dow Jones and S&P 500 increased by 5.4% and 4.4% respectively; in Europe, the German benchmark (DAX) and the British one (FTSE 100) added another 5% to their value in December. The Bulgarian index SOFIX rose more "modestly" just over 2% for the month, and finished the year spectacularly with over 42% return.

Fixed income performance was relatively flat, as markets had to digest fears of the spread of the new variant of the virus (Omicron), rising inflation and warning messages from central banks. This concern of a weaker future growth, led to a flattening of the US yield curve. Small caps also underperformed large caps over the month as uncertainties about future growth weighed on their performance.

The appearance of the highly infectious Omicron variant led to a spike in equity market volatility, as hospitalizations due to new Covid-19 cases rose sharply towards the end of the year. Some European countries even enforced temporary full lockdowns. However, markets quickly recovered as new data indicated a lower risk of severe disease and complications.

In the next few months continued pandemic-related restrictions could lead to disappointing economic data, but on the other hand, if Omicron is short-lived, 2022 could be another year with solid GDP growth and rising corporate earnings. Our current position remains overweight in equities, but Omicron, rising inflation and normalization (cooling off) of fiscal and monetary policy are risks to watch in the coming year.
